Hindus Tear Down Mosque, Setting Off a Crisis in India

India, to begin construction of a temple in the Hindu god Ram, also called Rama, and to destroy the Mosque of Babar. Hindu fundamentalists say the mosque was built on a sacred Hindu site, the very spot where Ram was born.

The mosque has been an important site for Muslims since it was built in 1526 by the Emperor Babar, who led the Muslim conquest of India.

No Longer in Use
The mosque was no longer used for prayers, but Muslims had refused to relinquish control of the building, fearing that that could lead to the dispossession of Muslim shrines throughout India.

The Hindus destroyed 12,000, some in an effort to destroy temples and other holy buildings, including the school buildings taken over by Muslims.

Throughout the week, I issued a stream of orders, sometimes vowing to stop the decision to deploy troops.

On Saturday, it is to decide whether to attempt a construction symbolic exercise ground on which the boys will perform.

The crowd's initial discipline, caused in part by a network of white-kniving marshalls and underground assurances from Hindu leaders that any governmental activities would be conducted from a sense of calm and tightness. ■ ■

But some young militants said they would destroy the mosque and start work on the temple regardless of what their leaders said. One, Anu Aggarwal, who said he was from New Delhi, hurried by with a group of militants waving swords, clubs and iron pipes, and brandishing an air pistol aggressively.
